Publications Assistance Program (PAP)

1998-99 Activity Report

1) Background

Through the Publications Assistance Program the federal government subsidizes the cost of mailing some periodical publications, via Canada Post, to subscribers within Canada. Special rates are also funded by the Department of Canadian Heritage for exchanging books between libraries within Canada.

Although the Publications Assistance Program has changed significantly over the years, its existence dates back to the 1800s. It was briefly called the Publications Distribution Assistance Program but is still widely referred to as the "Postal Subsidy Program." For many years, funded postal rates were available to virtually all periodicals and newspapers as well as books, and no distinctions were made as to type, origin, or whether recipients paid to receive publications or not. Eventually, special rate categories and eligibility criteria were established.

Responsibility for the general policy governing the subsidies was transferred to the Minister of Communications in 1979 while program administration remained with Canada Post. By the mid-1980s more than $200 million were being invested annually to reduce the costs of distributing eligible publications to Canadian readers. At the end of the decade, there were over 8,000 publications benefitting from the Program. As a result of a severe (50%) reduction in funding in 1990, the criteria for eligibility were narrowed. Exclusions included daily newspapers, large local weekly newspapers, controlled circulation magazines, all mailers of books except libraries, and foreign magazines no matter where they were printed. The objective of the restructuring was to focus remaining funds on Canadian-owned and -controlled paid circulation publications.

In 1996 the Department of Canadian Heritage assumed responsibility for administration of the Program. After consultations with the periodical publishing industry, the Publications Assistance Program was launched in the spring of 1997. In order to ensure consistent application of eligibility criteria, all beneficiaries were required to re-register.

Concurrently, in March 1996, the legality of the postal subsidy was challenged before a World Trade Organization panel. As the result of an appeal of the panel's decision by the United States, the Publications Assistance Program had to be compliant with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade by October 1998. The Program was changed from a preferential mailing rate to direct subsidy through the establishment of separate accounts at Canada Post for each registered title.

2) Program Objectives

The principal objectives of the Publications Assistance Program are:

- to encourage the affordable distribution of certain printed Canadian cultural products to Canadian readers at comparable costs;
- to ensure small community weekly newspapers are able to continue the important role they play in rural Canada;
- to support minority official language and ethnic weekly newspapers so they remain a vital element in promoting Canada's cultural diversity; and,
- to provide access to those readers who, due to their geographic location, or physical limitation, do not have access to a public library by supporting the distribution of library books to such readers.

3) Program Description and Operation

Now administered solely within the Department of Canadian Heritage, the Publications Assistance Program provides postal subsidies to eligible Canadian-owned and -controlled paid circulation publications that are mailed in Canada for delivery in Canada, including: periodicals (magazines and journals); small community, minority official language, ethnic, and national and regional weekly newspapers; and commercial newsletters.

To be eligible, publications must meet certain requirements (outlined in detail in the Applicant's Guide, available on the departmental website or in hard copy). Key elements of these criteria include ownership, circulation, editorial and advertising content:

- Canadian-owned and -controlled;
- paid circulation to bona fide subscribers and single copy sales comprise at least 50% of total circulation;
- advertising does not exceed an average of 70% of total publication space;
- a significant portion of original material is produced by Canadians; and,
- commercial newsletters must be published for that purpose on a regular cycle.

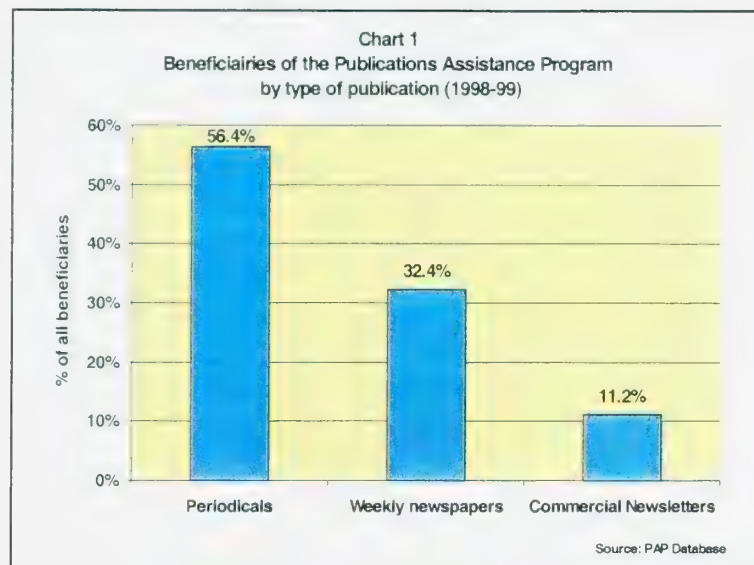

With the administrative changes put in place to ensure General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade compliance, funded postal rates were converted to direct subsidies effective October 30, 1998. As a result, each time a publisher mails a registered publication, the total commercial cost of the mailing is calculated by Canada Post along with the amount of subsidy to which eligible copies are entitled. The subsidy amount is deducted from the title's account and the difference is paid by the publisher. In 1998-1999, it meant, for example, that a publisher paid 8.1 cents to mail each of the first 10,000 eligible copies of a publication that weighed under 200 grams. The cost to publishers was slightly more for heavier publications and for copies exceeding the first 10,000 copies.

4) Program Results: 1998-1999

In 1998-99, a total of 1,338 periodical publications benefitted from the Program as well as those library books mailed at the Library Book Rate. For that year, the postal costs covered by the Department of Canadian Heritage amounted to $47.3 million.

In 1998-99, the total annual circulation of the publications registered in the Publications Assistance Program was more than 338 million copies. Of that total, more than 183 million copies (54%) were subsidized. The postal subsidy applies only to copies of an issue addressed to bona fide subscribers, newsstands and retailers in Canada.

In terms of number of registered publications, periodicals represent the largest category. They include general and special interest magazines as well as literary and scholarly journals. In 1998-99, as indicated in Chart 1, periodicals accounted for more than 56% of the publications that received assistance.

Weekly newspapers, which include small-community, national and regional, minority official language, and ethnic papers, accounted for 32% of the publications on the Program.

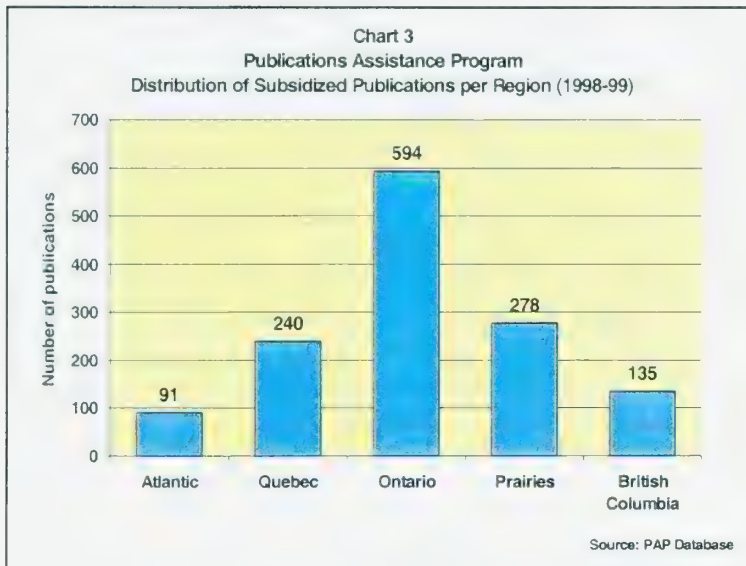

Finally, commercial newsletters represented 12% of all titles that received assistance from the Program.

Chart 2 shows the value of subsidies obtained by each category of publication. Periodicals received 79% ($37.4 million) of the subsidies while they represent 56% of all beneficiaries of the Program. Many magazines have a much larger circulation than small-community newspapers or commercial newsletters. In addition, the delivery costs of magazines is typically higher than the delivery costs of community newspapers. Magazines tend to be heavier and distributed nationally while community newspapers are usually lighter and distributed locally.

The subsidized postal rates are available to publications originating from every region in the country, but the majority of them (more than 62%) come from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec (see Chart 3).

In 1998-99, the $47.3 million invested in the Publications Assistance Program by the Department of Canadian Heritage meant that every week and every month, millions of publications were mailed to Canadian readers at a reduced postal rate. The first beneficiaries of the Program are the publishers, as the postal subsidy significantly reduces the cost of mailing their publications to subscribers. But ultimately, the Program also benefits Canadian readers of these publications through more affordable subscription rates.

Annexes 1, 2 and 3 list all publications that benefit from the Publications Assistance Program as of December 10, 1999.
